

Persona Narrative

Joseph is a 30 years old high school science teacher. Recently, he's teaching the principle of electronics and circus, but he finds out that students are not very interested in reading heavy text materials. So he starts to search for interesting projects, which can teach his students about circus by doing hands-on activities. He goes to the Gadglteration website, searches projects that related to circus and electronics, and finds the Noise Maker project. He looks through the introduction of this project and thinks it perfectly fits his goal of teaching circus. Below the introduction, there is a tutorial video, he clicks on it and knows how to make the Noise Maker. He then notices there is a tip next to the video that shows the basic electronics he will be used in this project. And when he clicks on these electronics, it leads him to a page that lists the entire online store that he can buy these electronics. He goes back to the project page, and finds there are two sections on the bottom: a comment session and a challenge session. So he looks through these comments and gets the chance to know different opinions of this project from different people. He then clicks the challenge section, and in there, he sees all the projects that other people make that are similar to the Noise Maker project. People can view these projects, comment on them and vote on them. This section gives Joseph an inspiration to encourage his students to upload their projects to this website and vote for each other's works.